The Ohio River is much lower at present than it has been this season; Steam boats cannot run higher up than Maysville. In consequence of this, great numbers of passengers take the stage at Maysville, which is the most expeditious mode of travelling [sic] at this season of the year when the river is navigable only for boats of small burden.

As the season approaches at which Martins take their annual flight, Capt. John Cleaves SYMMES has proposed to catch a quantity of them, and tie labels to their tails, in order to find out the place of their residence during the winter months.
